Basic information structure

Here are some sample structures to help you start categorising the data, you can adjust the structure to cater to the dataset.

Interest: Movies
- title
- duration
- genres
- synopses
- content rating
- consumer rating
- released date
- cast
- film staff

Interest: Video Games
- title
- genres
- platform
- synopses
- released date
- content rating
- consumer rating
- developers

Important note:

- Watch out for different structures in a particular category, ensure that your final structure caters to these variants.

  e.g. Some people provided information about a particular album they like and some is an individual song

- Once you have defined a structure, make sure that structure is prominent throughout your dataset. If the dataset is incomplete, keep the structure the same by making use of empty element tags. This applies to both attributes and elements.

- Don't add any additional information into the final dataset even if you know

  e.g You know that the developer for the game Red dead redemption is Rockstar Games but the data is not in the set, so do not add this into the form

- Remember to break down the data to the most logical method of representation without taking away the meaning of the data.
  e.g. You would collectively define a heap of coffee as `<coffee/>` as opposed to `<grind/><grind/><grind/><grind/><grind/>`

- If you are completely unsure how to categorise the data, check the information with a search engine to give you a better understanding.
